This RISD Biennial NYC 2006, selected by curator Robert Storr, presents a body of work by alumni of Rhode Island School of Design. The work displays RISD's artistic diversity and is drawn from many different disciplines, while including alumni in a span of nearly sixty years.

Given all the work created by alumni, all the artwork submitted for viewing, and all the shows that could have been chosen, we must consider how this exhibition represents the moment – the moment of creation, the moment of choosing and now, the moment of viewing.

The work shown here truly captures that moment in time – through a mark, a brushstroke, a symbol, a movement, a pixel or a sound. This is a notable reminder of the ephemeral quality of the artistic process. This exhibition, in its selection and its showing, parallels that process by marking time with the acts of installation, opening and closing.

RISD Biennial NYC 2006

No single Biennial can capture the essence of all alumni work. At best, this is a depiction of the moment, capturing the elusive expression of individual alumni artists who continue to work, grow and mature. Through the succession of Biennial exhibitions, and observation of what is shown and seen over the years, the creativity of RISD alumni will be experienced.

Our thanks to all who have made this exhibition possible, but especially to the alumni who have guided the process and participated by sharing their work and their moment of creation with us.
